

Daniela La Foresta is full professor of Political and Economic Geography at the Department of Political Science, University of Naples Federico II, lecturer and member of the Doctoral Council in 'Public Policies of Cohesion and Convergence' at the same department as well as president of the Association Observatory Digital Territories (Te|Di). She has participated in various international research projects and groups, collaborating with public and private bodies and with prestigious research and consultancy institutes. Her research, mainly focused on the themes of territorial innovation, territorial marketing, local development and the geography of marginal areas, has produced a vast body of publications and scientific contributions, the results of which have been presented in numerous authoritative academic fora, both nationally and internationally.