

Federica Sandy Curcio, Phd student in Policy of cohesion and convergence in the European scenario. Federica Sandy Curcio, is a a PhD student in Public Policies of cohesion and convergence in the European scenario at University of Naples Federico II, Department of Political Science. Her scientific interests concern European cohesion policy, cooperation and territorial development, topics that he has deeply explored through various research experiences, first and foremost at the Digital Territories Research Observatory (TeDi) of the Federico II University, of which she is a member. Federica is working as contributor as part of the "Europe" editorial team at Opinio Juris – Law & Politics Review, a periodical magazine of information and analysis on current political, legal and international affairs. In the past she has worked with several Italian Think Tanks, including the International Studies Center (CeSI) where she was involved in research on the external relations of the European Union, in particular with the Middle East and North Africa region.